
STRANGLING OF FREE THOUGHT CONDEMNED

Bryn Mawr President Says It
Is a Terrible Menace to
U. S. Schools

By Associated Press.
South Hadley, Oct. 7.—One hundred per cent Americanism that insists upon teaching things "as they are" rather than how to make them "as they should be" is a menace which will "strangle free thought in its cradle and will deprive us of our sorely needed leaders," said President M. Carey Thomas of Bryn Mawr College in an address here today. She was speaking at the Founder's Day celebration of Mount Holyoke College.

The senior class speaker laurel wreaths upon the grave of Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke. Dean Farrington conferred two honorary degrees of Doctor of Science upon Miss Julia Catherine Stimson and Miss Annie Warburton Goodrich. Mrs. Thomas called attention to what she said was a present world-wide renascence in education, and continued:

"This universal appreciation of the power of education has brought upon it a regard as the most terrible menace to American schools and colleges that has come in my lifetime. The Federal and State governments, Americanization societies and many other organizations are demanding that children and college students should be taught citizenship, social ethics, 100 per cent Americanism. That the constitution is not to be changed; that the things which have made our great industries which we hope to see right, shall be regarded as sacred."

"This means that teachers and college professors, as yet only in universities but soon at large universities, are being required to teach things as they are, are being required to teach things as they are right in stead of how to make things as they should be."

"All the conservative forces now in control of the world are joining in this propagandist teaching to save their present privileges by applying the younger generation. We have seen what this did for Germany. It will do the same for the United States."

FISHERS SEE WOMAN SLAIN ON BRIDGE

Detroit River Dragged for Body Thrown Over Rail Into Water

By Associated Press. Detroit, Oct. 7.—The Harbor Master's Department today began dragging Detroit River in the vicinity of Belle Isle for the body of a woman reported to have been thrown from the bridge leading to the island park.

Two fishermen reported to police early today that a man and woman were walking across the bridge shortly after midnight when the woman was seized and thrown over the rail. The man, it was said, then ran to the railroad approach and disappeared.

The fishermen were unable to give a description of the man and said they were too far from the point at which the woman was thrown into the water to rescue her.

WOMAN HELD UP IN CROWD NEAR CHURCH

Daring Rhode Island Robber Uses Revolver to Aid Flight With Small Booty

East Greenwich, Oct. 7.—The most daring holdup in the history of this town occurred when Miss Bridget McGrath was robbed of her pocketbook by an armed robber while she was standing talking to friends near the entrance of Our Lady of Mercy Church after attending a service. It was the third holdup here in as many nights. In the stolen pocketbook were 40 cents and a rosary.

The thief walked into the small crowd of churchgoers and brandished a revolver as he grabbed Miss McGrath's pocketbook. He then ran toward a nearby street.

The robber's act was such a daring one that the group of churchgoers were dashed into flight. They not only did not follow the gunman, but they could not furnish a description of him to the police.

The other victims of recent robberies here are Mrs. Adair Blanchard and Adair Larocque. The robber stopped Mrs. Blanchard when she was light opposite her home and after emptying the contents of her purse gave the pocketbook back to her.

WEST END MAN KILLED BY CAR IN BROCKTON

Brockton, Oct. 7.—Sixty-year-old Michael J. Greary, of No. 39 Allen street, Brockton, was killed by an electric car while waiting on the tracks near Melrose Cemetery. He apparently failed to hear or see the coming car, which was in charge of Motorist D. W. Hill, of No. 117 Warren street. The car struck and dragged him 30 feet.

Frigates, Barks, and Barkentines

Some of the ships that are in dry dock on their third floor are only six inches over all. Others measure several feet on the water line. All are perfect in the tiniest details. The rigging is properly placed. The capstan, the wheel, every cleat and hatch, is properly proportioned and in its place. The frigates show rows of guns ready for action.

Some of these ships were made by French sailors who were taken prisoner by the British in the Napoleonic wars. Others were made by sailors during long whaling voyages, which lasted two or three years. Such care was used to have every detail correct and in proper scale that one ship may represent the work of an entire voyage.

To New Englanders this exhibit is particularly interesting. It recalls the War of 1812 and the later days when Salem was a bigger port than Boston, and when New Bedford rivaled Nantucket as a port for whalers. We hope all those who had seagoing forefathers and those who love the sea will visit this collection of old-time frigates, barks, and barkentines.

FRILIN ABOVE AND TUBELOWS! Paris is not satisfied with merely called down stockings—it must be fancy, hence the fancy frills. Miss Marion Wilkins, above, brought the frill back. It is not likely that sensible Boston will take it up. (Int.)

MUSIC HATH CHARMS! "Humming" the prettiness, Mr. Hoy's pet diversion, seems to be a process of turning comfort to his employees and as Exhibit A we offer a scene in the smoking room of the International Pacific. A graphophone plays all the hits of the day, while the waiters shimmy and sway as they mendly hand the booze. Such places as "The Letter That Never Came" and "I Wonder What's Keeping the Mail Man" are absolutely barred. (K.)

AS THE CITY EDITOR said to us, it's all to how you make up. So let's take a peep behind the scenes at the grand opera show. Meet Ada Paggi, mezzo-soprano, unspiced in her dressing room at the Metropolitan Opera House. (K. T.)

How We Undersell

In these days, countless mills and factories pay all their expenses and make most of their profits out of by-products that formerly went to waste. We operate on much the same plan, deriving our profits not so much from our customers' pockets as from what might be called the by-products of this big 9-store retail clothing business.

One of our profitable by-products, so to speak, is the tremendous volume of our spot-cash buying which brings us price and quality advantages otherwise impossible to obtain. If we could save them all, we'd be more than satisfied to take our cash discounts as our entire profits.

Another source of profit, or saving, is the friendship of our patrons whose good will and good words are a most effective business building force, bringing us countless new customers and vastly increasing our volume of sales with no expense to us for this potent form of publicity.

These, and many other similar savings, are what enable us to sell you the finest clothing obtainable at prices way under what ordinary stores ask you for such goods.

YANKEE PITCHERS NOT FORMIDABLE FOR THE REST OF SERIES

By HUGH S. FULLERTON.

New York, Oct. 7.—New York's Giants darkest hour is just before the dawn. Better in the second game of the World's Series, out-gunned, outgeneraled and shown up by a team which was supposed to be slow, the Giants, two down, still are fighting.

They lost the second game because they were pitched into a state of coma by Walter Hoge, the Dramatic Hall High School boy, and the score was 1 to 0 because the Giants were given more home plate before the aged and the two varieties of curves that Hoge served than they were before Mays.

The reason that the slusher was not greater was that Hoge pitched with one of the most astounding plays ever seen in a World's Series, and saved the Giants, and their pitcher, from being smothered in the first and second innings.

But for these two marvelous plays the Yankees would have won by a tremendous margin, and the chances are they would have driven half from the slab in two or three innings and put up a tremendous majority. It was the irony of fate that Hoge, the boy who played on the first, when it was falling, should have been the one who paved the way to the final disaster which left the Giants in the eighth inning, when they broke in amateurish fashion and permitted the Yankees to clinch their victory.

He pitched an easy chance, and the Yankees, who had been waiting for such an opening, rushed the attack and made the Giants look like a bunch of amateurs.

They ran the bases wild, they passed every advantage. They told the Giants that Bob Meusel would steal home on the next pitched ball, advertised it to the big crowd that Meusel would steal, warned everybody and then Meusel stole home, and Smith, the Giant catcher, muffed the ball and let it by a mere count.

The game was a bewildering and ridiculous show up of a team. The Yankees, who have been tossed as a club which can only hit, played the game, ran the bases, forced the attack, turned the McGraw system.

amused him and really made members of the Uplate.

The Yankees, with two games won, think the series is over. But the dope, right at the start, indicated that the Yankees would win the first two, and that then the Giants would get started. There is a lot of discouragement among the Giant fans, but make no mistake, the next game will see a reversal which will around the fans.

The Giants looked bad merely because they were stopped, hit and stumped by Hoge's pitching, and when a team cannot hit it looks bad.

The Giants again tried every system of attack that is known, excepting to bunt. They refused to bunt. See, even when the stakes of the game indicated that they ought to bunt. Three times the Giants had the first man on base, but refused to sacrifice him forward, which indicated that McGraw did not wish any benefit that the batters could hit Hoge.

Yet there never was a time, until, that the Giants did not have a chance to win.

Hoge pitched a marvelous game of ball. He started working too hard, exerting himself too much, putting the march on the ball. His speed was amazing, his fast curve broke fast and he altered them up with a peculiar slow curve which had the Giants puzzled and hitting feebly. But, after the sixth inning, Hoge slowed up and weakened perceptibly.

It is evident that the Giant's board of strategy did not see the move. He was uncertain of his control and his curve lost its sharpness. The Giants did not take advantage of it until the sixth and then tried vainly, which promised much, was cut short by a double play.

The McGraw board of strategy was out-generaled and at this writing it is too soon to think that this series is over. The dope indicates, however, that the Yankees will look worse in some future games than the Giants did in the last encounter.

There is no doubt but that the Yankees played all the baseball save that furnished by Hoge. They would have won by an overwhelming score with even an average break in luck.

Hoge pitched a peculiar game of ball. He was wild, he had a lot of speed on the ball, and the more he put on it the more accurate he was. But the Yankees could not hit him.

In fact the only three hard hits that they made were driven directly at Hoge. He was a line smasher, a two on bases, a hit good for two or three bases, which he caught and dragged down, snuffing a double play.

The next was a vicious transfer when he crossed cleanly and slipping backward, drove a runner going from second to third out of the race for an out.

The third was a screaming, screeching bouncer which he blocked, threw it all recovered and threw out his man. No other hard chance was offered any player on either team, and it was said that, when he got an easy runner in the eighth he looked it and wrecked the game.

The fans probably think that the Yankees were really, yet, but for that ill-luck of Hoge's, which paved the way to their win, the Giants might have won. They had Hoge's wash me and critical in the ninth. With a few run batters the Giants had no chance but to try to slug their way to victory, so they hit into a double play. Had they been playing for one or two runs, they might have won.

The hopes of the Giants are low, but without cause. It looks to me as if the Yankee pitching is formidable from now on. Neither Mays nor Hoge ever pitched a game in this series anything like they have pitched.

If Shawkey has one great game in him, the Yankees may sweep in series. It looks, however, as if they must treat to Harpner in the next game, which means a defeat for the Giants.

Mays may have one more good game left in him. Hoge certainly was an exhausted and worn pitcher when he pitched and he cannot come back on short notice.

The Yankees have the big edge as the dope indicated they would, but from now on watch these Giants closely.

Shrimp Gets Down to Business

HOT FINISH IN FISHERS' RACE IS EXPECTED

Up to today it looked like a runaway for the Elsie, because she was the only schooner without engines in her hold. Then the Ralph Brown, a crack modeled schooner, arrived from Boston to take over her trim, and it was found that she carried only one engine, and that this was to be removed after she was unloaded.

This gives added interest to the contest, because the Elsie and the Brown are two crack sailers and these will patrol and keep clear the coasts to be sailed over by the schooners in the first half of the week and to be held off Gloucester in thirty days.
